

F.D. Beckham is a writer children and young adult fiction. She is a resident of the Pacific Northwest, and she appreciates the beauty and spirit of nature. She enjoys learning about different cultures, their unique practices, superstitions, and religious beliefs.

In her writings the characters are adventurous, curious and mystifying. Her writings explore the connection between the spiritual environment and the physical environment. She shows how the characters gain an understanding of spirituality and relate the understanding to life's crisis, experiences, and situations. As a result the characters have unusual real life experiences that only occur in the imagination. The stories written by F. D. Beckham are entertaining and can be enjoyed by adults as well as children.

Brookline of St. Mary's Asylum is a delightful story about a girl named Brookline who is sent to live at an orphan asylum. She possesses a special perception that manifests through strange dreams. It is through one of her unusual dreams that it is revealed to her that she will be leaving her foster home. The asylum is unlike the typical idea of an orphan home. There are no rigid rules, until after the arrival of Sister Quartince. Although the home is poor, it is comfortable, and the children love it. Brookline grows to like the asylum and she develops a good friendship with her roommates Jane and Missy. Throughout the story she and her comrades get into exciting and unusual situations and meet interesting people.
