

Introduction

I was told in 1969 by a close friend of mine, Bonnie, who was a physic...

“Your love relationships will not go well in your life; there will be a lot of tragedy in your love life. And it will be difficult to keep a relationship with any one person. You will continue to find love and lose them.”

I did not know what she meant back then, but have come to understand what she meant today.

People you thought would never hurt you in your life will. And you will be left to think about “WHY!”

You will hurt others and have to carry the pain with you for a lifetime, and you will ask yourself “WHY!”

Most people will not accept other people for what they are and they try to change them so the relationship can be compatible. If people are not compatible in a relationship, it does not matter how much we try. When people try to change what and who we are, to save a relationship, it never works!

I have tried to change for some of the loves in my life, only to realize, it was not me. But I would always ask myself, “Well who am I then, and what do I want out of a love relationship?”

I watched different relationships friends and others that surround my life. Everyone has their own story to tell. I always wonder about relationships where two people have stayed together for decades.

Few people in these relationships are happy and content together. Most are miserable, yet they continue their relationship.

I have finally come to realize that all I want in life is to be happy. I want to be a free spirit, and most relationships will survive this type of thinking.

I have constantly struggled to attain happiness both personal and business, my entire life.

Both people and events throughout my life continue to try and stop me from attaining this happiness.

Is this just in my life that happiness cannot be attained, or has this just been my life’s destiny?

-Chris L. Joanet (circa 2007)