Schoolyard bullying is NOT a normal part of growing up – it is an attempt by one child to control another through intimidation, without respect for personal boundaries and/or individual differences. The reasons for discrimination are many – gender, physical size, strength and agility, physical handicap, skin, hair or eye color, religious or cultural practices... or maybe just because a child is shy and keeps to themselves.

Dr. Matteson provides a very clear look at bullying, what it is, what kind of person does it, where it might occur – and what to do if it happens to you, your child or someone you care about. You are not helpless and without recourse! There are laws in many states, and even "hate crime" laws can assist you in putting a stop to it.

Dr. Rande W. Matteson is Co-President of the Florida Chapter of the national advocacy group, The Bully Police, and a retired career law enforcement officer having served for 32 years in local, state and federal law enforcement investigative agencies. He has an earned doctorate in Corporate Leadership and has completed a pioneering and published research study on workplace bullying.

As an academic researcher and Department chair and college professor at Saint Leo University, Dr. Matteson's published research focuses on the psychological traits of leadership, bullying and dysfunctional relationships. He frequently lectures and publishes articles on abusive and bullying behavior. Rande is available for consultations and workshops for schools and businesses. He may be contacted through his website.
