

Chapter 11

Summary

-- None of the theories of evolution offer a satisfactory explanation for the peculiar and differing character and living habits of male and female, of all species of life

-- Mating, an indispensable part of evolution, actually consists of three separate jobs, pre-union preparation, union proper or the exchange of gametes, and the post-union unrest. The male is always reluctant to participate in this pairing, due to the loud and clear anti-male ambience of post union stage. Therefore nature has to forcibly bring the male to the mating arena, circumventing the reluctance with the help of a season dedicated to mating, during which, many endearments are available through the female.

-- It is for escaping from the dreadfulness experienced during the post-union stage of every instance of mating, that animals find it necessary to evolve

-- New species, therefore evolve, with more and more opportunities of allaying this dreadfulness, which amazes us by showing an “increase in complexity, as evolution moves ahead”

-- In the case of the final species of life, which as of now is humans, though not overtly dreadful, the post-mating stage is not pleasurable enough

-- The route, man has found to escape from the dread, is a many-forked approach.

The primary path is to devise an unending set of intangibles, like, a particular relationship, certain occasions, or desirable ambience, all with the ability to delay the requirement itself, or commencement, of ‘performance’. And for empowering and perpetuating those ‘intangibles’, man has chosen to live as a society, overlooking all its ills. (Also, we are celebrating this as a distinct element of human nature)

Next is to stretch, whatever may be of interest at that moment, to its limits and immerse in it. This in fact is the origin of all forms of extremism, including the few that are a grave threat to happy living, and the many that are helpful, enjoyable or life-saving. (Society greatly encourages this by suitable awards and honors)

Another one is to keep women always well suppressed such that if at all they express dissatisfaction, it shall not be crossing the minimum threshold of oppressiveness necessary to upset the man. (Interestingly, as the world progress and women take part in more activities, giving them a wider avenue to release pent-up 'dissatisfaction', they are also suppressed less.)

-- Discovery of VIAGRA has introduced a major non-linearity into the smooth flow of evolution, by having the potential to bring its primary facilitator, the dread of the male-female union, under human whims and fancies. This will, in effect, render 'all forms of extremes', redundant.

Consequently, unfathomable changes are in the offing. Changes that are capable of easing the desire to evolve, shall rewrite the future of the species. And the changes that are capable of moderating the fear of death, shall rewrite the present.

In the interim, more acute reactions can be expected from all societies to events that are not in line with the norm, especially on issues involving women. Primarily because of its long-standing effect, the popularity of the 'irrational' will be at an all-time high, anywhere and everywhere.