

Integrity & Trustworthy

Leaders are held to certain standards. Good leaders should be authentic; truthful and reliable. Integrity is doing what's right when no one is watching. It's a behavior trait that's admired by those it affects. A person that leads must be truthful and not waver. Leaders should never use tricks and schemes to win people over. It only causes division. If a leader makes a mistake, he/she should take ownership and never make excuses. Never play the blame game, have the courage to do the right thing. Good leaders will always try to acquire unity. Where there are peace and harmony anything and everything can be accomplished. A Leaders behavior should stand out as honorable and uncompromising in their worthiness. They should never compromise the truth.

Prioritize

Being a leader means to bring stability into a group or organization. A crucial obligation falls to a leader to motivate those all around to become organized and put in order what comes first. Make time for whatever is important. Leaders hold the primary position so they are in charge and should assign each team member their duty in support of their agenda's to bring the vision to fruition. Prioritizing is important in making sure everything is met and on schedule. As a belief, it means doing 'first things first;' as a process, it means evaluating a group of items and ranking them in their order. The job is not about what the leader accomplish, but how the entire team can succeed. A leader must know their limits and never spread them self too thin. Knowing their strengths and weaknesses can help determine who on the team play what role. Leaders cannot watchdog or predict the outcome of everything. They need to choose the right team to make the task much easier. Work only with qualified people that are teachable that they can trust and count on.

Communication

A good leader never takes a position for granted. Communication is necessary for leadership. It has already been established that a leader is head or represent the authority figure of a team or organization. If there's a team of people in a group, the authority figure of that group must take charge and make sure everyone knows what he/she is supposed to be doing. Communication skills are vital and should never be overlooked. All leaders should be professional in whatever setting they are in. They should make all expectations clear to their team; individually and collectively. A good lead will always share, contact, and meet with an individual or team members to keep them up-to-date of progress. Leaders should think through how they want an individual or their team to treat them and likewise treat them the same way, but be firm in their tone of speech and mean what they say. He/she should never do or say anything that they may later regret. Depending on the style of communication it can make or break an organization. Always make good eye contact while speaking, paying close attention to the other people's reactions. Leaders should make sure that their message is heard with clarity.
