On a gloomy day in 1991 or 1992, I cannot remember exactly, while I was reading Faulkner's novel The Sound and the Fury, I suddenly felt extraordinary chest pain, jaw pain, and general discomfort. I called my first ex-wife, Helen, whom I had married in London when I was living and studying in England, and our only son Christian, who is proudly a British Subject, immediately, and since they lived very close to where I was, they came over.
We called for help, and the ambulance arrived shortly. I was taken to the nearest medical facility, Downey Hospital.
Evidently, I had what they believed to have been a myocardial infarction. I was removed from Downey Hospital via ambulance to the University of California, Irvine, where I had heart surgery. After a couple of days, I returned home. It took me six months to recover, but I was on Cardizem and nitroglycerin for several years.

ing backward into the left atrium" (Mayo Clinic, 2017).
Watching my health means that I see Dr. Michael Vasilomanolakis, who is also a Grammy Award winner, once or twice a year for an advanced checkup, stress echo, and advice on the many medications I currently take. Dr. Vasilomanolakis has become a great friend, and I trust him blindly. My cardiologist brother, Dr. Alfons Bebawi, has met him, and he agrees with me that Dr. Vasilomanolakis is one of the greatest doctors ever. Having a cardiologist brother is another face of the divine comedy that never ceases to amaze or amuse me. I watch, I feel, and I smile and look at life's large gray eyes. I smile a little longer and dive into an ocean of emotions wondering where I was a hundred years ago and where will I be a hundred years from now – dust in the wind.
