

On a hill in a small town with lots of youngsters and good times, especially during the holidays Kaleb sat on his bed in his room waiting for an answer to a major worry that was affecting not only his friendships but his own thinking. let's see what it's all about.

Knock, knock.

"Come in," Kaleb said as the door slowly opened and a silver haired lady entered with a cup of tea in one hand and a glass of warm not too warm milk in the other.

"Grandma Annie," Kaleb jumped for joy, "I'm so happy you came to visit."

He ran to give a big hug and a sweet kiss.

"Careful honey, let me put these down first. Then I'll be most happy to have one of your super bear hugs and a sweet peck on the cheek," she chuckled.

Kaleb waited and then threw his arms around her waist for a super hug, and she also bent down next in order to receive his sweet peck of a kiss on her cheek.

"So, honey, it's been a while and I know that a lot has been going on in your family"

" Oh yes I'm a Big Brother now and it's fun I also have a very serious worry Grandma Annie."

Grandma Annie frowned, "I'm sorry to hear that," she said gently, but I'm ready to listen.

"It turns out Mom and Dad are busy now with my new baby brother and I just don't know how to sort out this problem I have all by myself. My brain feels like it's in a fog."

"That's why I'm here Kaleb, So what is it?"

"It has to do with school and Halloween."

"Halloween?" Grandma Annie was puzzled, and added, "What could be problematic about Halloween?"