

CHAPTER 1

This story takes place in another realm but intimately relates to this Earth realm.

Yin, a nine-year-old Asian girl, wore a knee-length white dress, a pink top, and pink gym shoes. Blue and yellow stars floated around her gym shoes, and they went wherever Yin stepped.

Eternal, I wore a gold pants, and shirt, with a big planet Earth symbol on the front.

It is a known fact that women cannot think abstractly but are excellent in doing. Women learn best by doing. This is why childbirth and raising children are epic work for women. Women's farthest imagination cannot describe who they will be during and after childbirth. Mystery -- that is what women are made of.

On with Storytime: Lady Yin
From The Far East.

One day, like on the previous days, Eternal I walked north in the forest. It was a regular forest, like on Earth. And nine-year-old Yin walked right behind Eternal I, doing everything he did; if Eternal waved to a friendly parrot, Yin next waved to the friendly parrot; if Eternal I spoke to a peach tree, Yin next spoke those same words to the peach tree; Yin stepped in every place Eternal I did, even in Eternal I's very footsteps.

"This forest is just like the one on Earth, Yin."

"This forest is just like the one on Earth," repeated Yin.

Eternal I pushed a low-hanging branch out of his way. The branch would have hit Eternal I's waist, but the branch lurched forward at Yin's face. Eternal I looked into the future. Good job, Yin. I can't do everything for you. Eternal I thought to himself.

Yin saw the branch coming at her swiftly. "Hey, Dad! Why didn't you hold that branch? It almost chopped my head off."

"You're still talking, Yin. You must still have your head. It's logic!"

"Of course, I still have my head. I protected myself," Yin said, a bit peeved.

Briefly, Eternal I looked back at her as he kept walking and said, "I never promised you Puppy Tails, Ice Cream, and Sugar and Spice."

"That's nonsense. Say what you mean," Yin replied. "Well, at the place you are going, such nonsense is told to women and girls all the time."

"I don't want to go to this Earth realm," Yin replied.

